New Research Opportunity

Students in the spring Research Methods course POLS 320 will now have an opportunity to begin working on their fall Capstone research project. We expect this change to lead to better, fuller, less rushed Capstone projects in POLS 420, and to facilitate more integration between the two courses.

Faculty Activities

Dr. Morgan (10) delivered a paper at the annual American Political Science Association convention in San Francisco this past September titled "UN Peacekeeping Coalitions and Peacekeeper Fatalities."

Since the UN relies on member states to volunteer personnel for peacekeeping missions, its peacekeeping operations are ad hoc coalitions of personnel accustomed to working within diverse organizational structures. Investigating how these organizational structures impact the effectiveness of peace-keeping missions, using annual data of UN peacekeeping operations from 1990-2013, Dr. Morgan found that as coalitions include more mature security organizations, combatants kill peacekeepers at a significantly lower rate and magnitude.

Dr. Yi Selected as Election Observer

Taiwan's next general election is scheduled for Saturday, January 16, 2016, and Dr. Yi has been selected by the Taiwanese Election Committee to be part of the International Observation Mission, which consists of leaders from Europe, North America, and Asia who will observe and monitor the election to ensure its legitimacy. The election may be very significant in that polls indicate Taiwan is poised to elect its first female president, Tsai Ing-Wen, and also her opposition Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) may win control from the long dominant Kuomintang (KMT). This could bring major domestic policy changes, and also affect Taiwan's relations with China and the U.S. Dr. Yi is director of MC's China Program, and based in Beijing.
