

This study examined how Behavioral Health Programs affect grade school students in relation to their academic success. Using qualitative research methods, my study found that the skills that are taught to students will be beneficial to the child's self-regulation during the academic process. The benefits of this study are for the larger school community.