

Branched-chain amino acid (BCAA) supplementation is used in the fitness industry for improving muscle mass, reducing muscle fatigue, and reducing muscle wasting. The research question in this study was whether BCAA supplementation actually has an effect on muscle mass. It was hypothesized that BCAA supplementation causes an increase in muscle mass due to increased protein synthesis. It was found that most sources supported the hypothesis, but a few sources contradicted.