

This project assesses acid mine drainage (AMD) and the effectiveness of the treatment system implemented in Coe Hollow of the Monday Creek Watershed. AMD is a significant pollution source in Wayne National Forest and Athens, Ohio. The treatment system, installed in 2010, consists of a series of limestone leach beds and ponds. Past reports and water quality data from Ohio University were collected and compared with current field studies and water samples.