

This paper is a policy analysis case study comparison regarding felon voting rights in Pennsylvania and North Carolina. It provides historic context for the issue of disenfranchisement and then develops a goal-oriented framework of the two policies in order to analyze the successes and failures of each.