

Music in education has the ability to positively impact academic achievement for students. In fact, music can be used as a competitive tool against gaps that arise between students. Literacy, visual-spatial ability, and even physical health are improved from a musically rich life. Sadly, music programs are usually the first to be cut. Educating educators on the importance of music and the effects it has on the body will start music as a combative tool.