

Extensive research studies have recognized a positive longitudinal correlation between the acquisition of alphabet knowledge and future literacy achievement. Given that many state curriculum frameworks have required children to demonstrate certain alphabet knowledge at certain ages, teachers are expected to implement evidence-based alphabet instruction to meet the annual age-level expectations. This action research, using teacher interviews, student assessments, and weekly journals, aims to examine the effectiveness of several research-based pedagogical practices in teaching alphabet knowledge.