

We constructed a methanol derived hydrogen fuel cell, which takes advantage of the lower volatility of methanol as the primary fuel. We took advantage of 3D printing technology and low-cost materials to create a functioning, replicable design. We were able to produce both a voltage and current with the fuel cell. Given the functionality of the fuel cell, we expect the design has broader applications in renewable energy based systems.