

Optical tweezers are an instrument that uses a highly focused laser beam to induce attractive and repulsive forces on microscopic objects. These forces can be used to physically hold and manipulate microscopic objects from single atoms, to lipid membranes, to cells. The goal for this project is to design a setup for optical tweezers in order to speed up the rates of hindered chemical reactions.