

Does aerobic exercise affect adolescent's performance on standardized tests? Some experiments show a positive effect of increasing aerobic exercise on higher state standardized test scores. Evidence from longitudinal studies demonstrates a correlation between high aerobic fitness and increased test scores. The evidence strongly suggests that aerobic exercise has a positive effect on improving standardized test scores. This supports the necessity of physical fitness programs being implemented in schools.