

Childhood trauma is expressed in many different symptoms including inattention and hyperactivity. Many of these symptoms appear in many children that have been diagnosed with ADHD. Each barrier to learning has distinct symptoms, but many of them are very close to the same or overlap. Many professionals are starting to see that because of the similar symptoms, children who have experienced trauma are being misdiagnosed with ADHD, and not receiving the proper treatment.