

Muscle soreness is experienced by not just athletes, but an overall active population. The purpose of the repeated measures study is to determine the efficacy of two different treatments at decreasing pain associated with muscle soreness and increasing knee range of motion. Baseline measurements were taken before the muscle inducement protocol was given. Participants returned 24 hours later for one of two treatments, with measurements taken before and after. Results and conclusions are pending.