

Many school shooters exhibit alike patterns in what they do and how they express themselves before they commit the heinous acts. These can often be predictable, and many schools have let them fly under the radar. Finding these students and teaching teachers how to identify them and the risk factors they exhibit is key. This poster will inform you of what to look out for and how to react based on the situation in a school setting.