

Writers In Residence is a program that teaches creative writing to incarcerated youth. This is the first semester for Marietta College to participate in the program, working at the Washington County Juvenile Detention Center. This poster presentation reflects our overall experience, including the benefits and skills for the residents in the program, the students, and the community. At the end of the semester, student work is published in a chapbook and shared with the community.