Finance

Degree: Bachelor of Arts in Finance

As a Finance Major, you'll focus on developing the technical skills and abilities you need to identify investors' needs and to analyze investments and corporate finance. At the same time, you'll gain a broad understanding of every element of business – including economics and accounting. And because so much of the work of analysts involves dealing with clients, our courses stress problem-solving and communication skills, giving you an added advantage over others in the field.

"The ever evolving investment landscape demands tactful skepticism and deep critical thinking. As the investment world becomes ever more complex and intertwined, professionals are challenged to evaluate investment opportunities in a global context. The interaction between world regions, individual countries, and even between domestic industries influences investment decisions and investment success more than ever before. The finance major at Marietta College provides students with a necessary foundation for evaluating investment opportunities. This foundation is strengthened by a student's ability to take advantage of a liberal arts education and gain perspective from additional classes within and outside the Department of Business & Economics."
